Levels of Policing

Policing is the most expensive component of the Criminal Justice System

There are four levels of Policing in Canada

Federal Provincial Municipal Aboriginal

Federal Police: known as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, or RCMP

RCMP provide investigative and protective services to the federal government.

Serve as provincial police in everywhere except Ontario, Quebec, and Newfoundland Labrador.

In some communities they also act as municipal police.

Federal Police

RCMP is responsible for federal policing which covers four mandates:

- Border Integrity
- Drugs and Organized Crime
- International Policing
- Financial Crime

Often provincial and municipal police agencies work with the RCMP to enforce law in these areas.

Municipal Police:

funded by the city they have jurisdiction over their city or town

Municipal Police are organized into numbered division and the division are divided into squads or units

Municipal Police protect the largest number of Canadians
Municipal Police duties include:

- preserving the peace
- preventing crimes from occurring
- assisting crime victims
- apprehending criminals
- laying charges
- participating in prosecutions,
  executing warrants,
- enforcing municipal bylaws
Municipalities can employ the RCMP as their local police force if they do not wish to start their own.

This is the case in Langford, Sidney and Nanaimo.

Aboriginal Police: Developed to police aboriginal communities

Each First Nation can enter into an agreement with the federal or provincial government to have a stand-alone aboriginal police force or First Nations Contingents
Aboriginal Police:

- Aboriginal Communities have unique policing needs
- Established in 1991, the Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples (RCAP) concluded that "the justice system has failed Aboriginal people," the key indicator of which was their steadily increasing and disproportionate representation in Canadian correctional facilities.
Aboriginal Police:

While Aboriginal peoples comprise 2.7 percent of the adult Canadian population, approximately 18.5 percent of offenders now serving federal sentences are of First Nations, Métis and Inuit ancestry (Correctional Service Canada, 2006.)

Approximately 68 percent of federal Aboriginal offenders are First Nations, 28 percent are Métis and 4 percent Inuit.
